

Environment And Safety Training

Laws and regulations mandate many types of training regarding hazardous materials use, pollution prevention and occupational safety. The type of information you are required to know varies depending on your job. Your supervisor or the office of Environment, Safety and Risk Management can tell you what types of training are required. You can receive your required training in the classroom or, for many safety courses, on-line.

Classroom training

Classroom training is scheduled regularly and is provided by a staff member or by video. Some courses can be self-administered using written materials for those who miss a classroom session. In either case contact your supervisor or the office of Environment, Safety and Risk Management for arrangements.

Self-administered on-line training

A number of safety training courses are offered on-line (e.g. Defensive Driver). In order to access the training you will need a "User ID" and a password. Your ID and password are available from JoAnn Stuermer (ext 8488).
