After they fumigated us, they brought us to Friona and it was there, that they told us that our job was to crop cotton. “It was there, that I was able to see what a cotton plant looks like.

One night we had nothing to eat so my friend and I went to the cage where the chickens were and we caught five of them... On day my boss approached me and asked, ‘Have you seen a coyote because it seems that my chickens are disappearing.’ I told him that I have not seen anything. He never knew about all of this.

Maybe another way of discrimination would be, when then fumigated us with DDT, but that was nothing for me. I just took it as a compliance to prevent any spread of lice’s or any other contagious disease.

No, they did not mention anything about our salary. I do not know if they do that because they think that immigrants come to the United States in of search of a better life. Immigrants do not care about anything, not even about how much money are they going to make, they just come.

No, the only problem at that time was racism. When I bought my truck, I would drive myself to the nearest town and as I started walking down the streets, some young people about my age, would call me “wetback”, but since I did not know what they were talking about, I did not care.

For me a bracero is someone who deserves respect because they were a huge help for the United States, during the years that many of the American men were fighting in WWII.

No, they did not mention anything about our salary. I do not know if they do that because they think that immigrants come to the United States in of search of a better life. Immigrants do not care about anything, not even about how much money are they going to make, they just come.

No, the only problem at that time was racism. When I bought my truck, I would drive myself to the nearest town and as I started walking down the streets, some young people about my age, would call me “wetback”, but since I did not know what they were talking about, I did not care.

For me a bracero is someone who deserves respect because they were a huge help for the United States, during the years that many of the American men were fighting in WWII.

After they fumigated us, they brought us to Friona and it was there, that they told us that our job was to crop cotton. “It was there, that I was able to see what a cotton plant looks like.

One night we had nothing to eat so my friend and I went to the cage where the chickens were and we caught five of them... On day my boss approached me and asked, ‘Have you seen a coyote because it seems that my chickens are disappearing.’ I told him that I have not seen anything. He never knew about all of this.

Maybe another way of discrimination would be, when then fumigated us with DDT, but that was nothing for me. I just took it as a compliance to prevent any spread of lice’s or any other contagious disease.

No, they did not mention anything about our salary. I do not know if they do that because they think that immigrants come to the United States in of search of a better life. Immigrants do not care about anything, not even about how much money are they going to make, they just come.

No, the only problem at that time was racism. When I bought my truck, I would drive myself to the nearest town and as I started walking down the streets, some young people about my age, would call me “wetback”, but since I did not know what they were talking about, I did not care.

For me a bracero is someone who deserves respect because they were a huge help for the United States, during the years that many of the American men were fighting in WWII.