Baby, I'm a Monarchist
Sexual violence and oppression violate individuals as well as the values of our organization. The Boston Area Liberation Medic Squad (BALM Squad) works to promote the health and well-being of activists at progressive demonstrations and beyond. We will not tolerate sexual assault or harassment within our organization or within the larger progressive political movement.

Sexual violence has recently become a prominent issue in the Boston activist community. To further education, discussion and action related to this issue, we will:

- address all incidences of sexual harassment and assault as directly and immediately as possible
- educate ourselves about sexual violence and work to address this issue in our workshops and trainings
- work with others to develop a Boston activist community that 1) recognizes the social and political dynamics underlying sexual violence, 2) engages in active discussion about sexual violence and how it impacts our community, and 3) creates a network of resources and support for survivors Intro.

This zine is rushed and incomplete. It was started while one of us was working a demanding, full-time job, and the other was working through college mid-terms. It is being finished around eight am the morning of the zine fair for which it was being prepared. There are contributions from a few, but not as many as we would have liked. At our earliest convenience we will be republishing an updated, revised and expanded version. Nevertheless, the message is still hopefully there.

This zine is the experiences of two wymyn with one particular man in our community. It was not easy to write. It is also a glimpse into some of the underlying cultural factors that allow sexual assault to be marginalized, silenced, and dismissed, even within self-proclaimed radical communities. Sexual assault is not an isolated matter, rather it is part of the complex social structure of patriarchy. It is unfortunate that we have not had the time or resources to address the intricacies of these issues further, but we are eagerly planning to do so.

Rich is dangerous. To protect our community from further attacks by him, we must make everyone aware of his disturbing patterns of assault. We are taking this action on paper to create a lasting record that minimizes the potential for rumors to continue. We hope that this offers other survivors hope and strength. We also hope to empower other activists to be supportive allies as they work to eradicate sexual assault.

We would like to apologize for the constant use of the word womyn (or woman or women). We are aware that sexual assault happens to people of all genders and is perpetrated by people of all genders. We have both been assaulted by Rich and we are both womyn-identified. However, that does not mean that Rich has only assaulted people who identify as womyn, nor does it mean that he won’t assault people who don’t identify as womyn. We plan on correcting this in future editions of this zine and are very sorry for marginalizing non-womyn survivors.

Mad Love,

i think in general i have a pretty good place in this world. there are a lot of amazing people in my life and i'm doing a lot of amazing things and i'm lucky that my eyes are open wide so i can see a bigger picture and i feel purpose and i have a lot of adventures and a lot of joyful moments and a lot of painful moments and a lot of real moments and i've seen a whole lot of things and i'm really young and i have so much more time and and and and...

but right now shit fucking sucks. there is a lot that is wrong right now. i'm going to vent a little bit because you are removed from my situation. here is the deal: i have several weeks of life and school to catch up on from when i was really sick. i have a trial october 28th, and the thought of going back into that courtroom makes me nauseated instantly. and i was sexually assaulted last march and a couple nights ago. when it rains it pours ey? and it's raining!!! and cold. it's all kind of scary. the assault last march was a lot worse than a couple nights ago. far worse. but it was someone who i didn't know very well and who was very easy to cut out of my life and avoid. a couple nights ago wasn't as bad but it caused me to have a flashback to last march which caused me to freak out in front of the person who was assaulting me, which was very very bad. but the real problem is that this person is part of the activist/punk/zine scene and is pretty high profile and fairly well known and i feel a responsibility to do something about this. i could ruin this guys life. like i could trash it, without having to do anything malicious, just by going public. and if i don't do something he will do this to someone else.
i'm not the first, i know that. but i have no desire to ruin someone's life, even if they are a lousy shitbag like he is. and it's tough cos i've been friends with him for two years, i mean i fuckin hate him now, but....FUUUUUCK'!! i hate this sooooooo much. someone assaults me and now i have all this responsibility to fix it, not only do i have to heal myself, which i'm doing a shit job of, but i've got to do something about him!!! i'm not bothering with the legal system of course...argh. what the fuck am i to do? what the fuck. i don't want this responsibility!! i don't have time!! i don't have the energy and i can't fuckin do it on my own and i'm too scattered in my life to have a successful support network. and my friends are too all over. and to be honest i don't trust this whole scene to care, fucking patriarchy...and he calls himself a feminist!!! i was at his house interviewing him for my men and masculinity tutorial and he fucking assaults me unfuckingbelievable. I have to make some decisions soon and i don't want to. and what to do about my school work "i'm sorry professor x i couldn't do my work cos some asshole didn't listen when i said no and then i freaked out because i had a flashback to the last asshole who didn't stop, i know i've been sick and in court and i've missed half the classes but do you think you could give me another extension, i'm just having a rough time you know?" or "judge x, do you think we could just stop playing this game? you know? i've had a rough time i'm dealing with a lot of assholes and i was really sick and i just have a lot to do? do you think we could skip this whole trial business? it's just disorderly conduct, just violations..."

in some ways it would be easier if it all felt like an emergency or crisis. i mean it is a crisis but it's not an emergency. and it would ...easier if it was. Because then the clock would stop and everything would change and it would be fucking horrible but it would be easy. This is the better way to go, but it's a lot harder. When my life got like this in the past I used to talk about how if one more thing went wrong I was going to lose it. But now I know that I'm not going to lose it. I filled my quota of losing it when I was 12. And I know what happens to people who lose it in this society and I'm never going there again. I feel stupid every time I say all of this. I don't know why. I don't know what to do with it all. Nothing feels cleansing. I used to cut a lot but I've stopped doing that I don't plan to start again. Ok. I'm done. Thanks for reading. Siiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiigh. I wish I was good at screaming. Or at least being angry.

Here's how sex works in MY community:

Antioch College Survival Guide 2002-2003

Sexual Offense Prevention Policy (SOPP)

Approved on April 23, 2002

PREFACE

In 1991, a group of Antioch students began creating this policy which would alter the culture of an entire community. This policy is the embodiment of Antioch College's commitment to ending sexual violence and fostering a culture of consensual sexuality. It governs the Antioch College Community by working with existing staff and faculty policies. It now exists as a piece of a larger educational framework charged with furthering these goals. The intent of this document is not to replace existing local, state, or federal laws, but to create an educational system to deal with sexual offenses within our community. All new students and visitors are required to sign a contract stating that they have read and understand the expectations of the policy. Due to the educational nature of this policy, the standards of conduct are different from those set forth by law. It is recommended that individuals discuss safer sex practices before initiating sexual behaviors. The college encourages community members to report violations of local, state, and federal law to the appropriate government agency.

"Consent" is defined as the act of willingly and verbally agreeing to engage in specific sexual conduct. Previously agreed upon forms of non-verbal communication are appropriate methods for expressing consent. In order for "consent" to be valid, all parties must have unimpaired judgment and a shared understanding of the nature of the act to which they are consenting including safer sex practices. The person who initiates sexual conduct is responsible for verbally asking for the "consent" of the individual(s) involved. "Consent" must be obtained with each new level of sexual conduct. The person with whom sexual conduct is initiated must verbally express "consent" or lack of "consent". Silence conveys a lack of consent. If at any time consent is withdrawn, the conduct must stop immediately.
manipulating you, or threatening you in any way. This spirit is about respecting that each person, for WHATEVER REASONS they choose, has a right to define why and how they will be touched, at any time or step along the way, no matter what you intend or want to share with them. (and vice versa.)

And because we come from a culture that so often disrespects personal choices sexually through confusing dynamics, gender role socializations, sexual manipulation, abuse and violence-part of the spirit of the policy is corrective. It helps us all learn to SPELL OUT THE NO'S so that each of us may feel freer and safer being assertive about and affirmed for SPELLING OUT THE YESES.

Antioch's SOP Policy is SOCIAL REVOLUTION - of course, why else would it ignite such a mixture of joy, empowerment, confusion and backlash? - and it is exhilarating to be part of a community that is working so hard to increase equality and mutual satisfaction, and to rectify domination and oppression.

CONSENSUAL SEXUALITY AT ANTIOCH

Under the Sexual Offense Prevention Policy:

- All sexual contact and conduct between any two (or more!) people must be consensual;

- Consent must be obtained verbally before there is any sexual contact or conduct;

- Silence is never interpreted as consent;

- If the level of sexual intimacy increases during an interaction (i.e., if two people move from kissing while fully clothed, which is one level, to undressing for direct physical contact, which is another level), the people involved need to express their clear verbal consent before moving to that new level;

- If one person wants to initiate moving to a different level of sexual intimacy in an interaction, that person is responsible for getting the consent of the other person(s) involved before moving to that level;
- If you have a particular level of sexual intimacy before with someone, you must still be sure there is consent each and every time;

- If you have a sexually transmitted disease, you must disclose this fact to a potential partner before engaging sexually;

- If anyone asks you to stop a particular kind of sexual attention or behavior, you must stop it immediately no matter what your intentions are with the attention.

Don't ever make assumptions about consent; assumptions can hurt someone and get you in trouble. Consent must be clear and verbal (i.e., saying, "Yes, I want to kiss you, too.")

ALCOHOL, DRUGS AND CONSENT

Taking advantage of someone whose judgment is substantially impaired is not acceptable behavior, and is a time of high risk for something nonconsensual to happen. Consent, even verbal consent, may not be valid during these times. Providing someone with alcohol to get them drunk so that person will consent to have sex with you (figuring you wouldn't get "as far" if that person were sober), is a violation under the SOPP. If you are so drunk that you act inappropriately with someone (in a way you wouldn't if you were sober), or if you are so drunk you don't hear "no," you may be charged under the SOPP.

Again, the primary purpose of the SOPP is educational, in this case, about the high risk of alcohol and drugs interfering with people's ability to be consensual. If you have a hard time knowing or setting your own personal boundaries, or respecting other people's boundaries, you may have a harder time if alcohol or drugs are involved. For truly consensual sex, you and your partner(s) should be sober to be sexual.
This is my third attempt at writing this. I have set out to write something on sexual violence. I have to write this for a few reasons. First of all I am a white presumably straight boy. I experience a large amount of privilege from a social hierarchy that oppresses an overwhelming portion of this country and the earth. The white male wrote the fucked up constitution, which legitimized the existence of a "new" country birthed from the blood of the people native to this land and built with the blood of enslaved Africans. (Sexual violence has been happening since the beginning of human existence I am merely offering a perspective on the society I live in) This country, and thus this society, has continued this wonderful tradition of oppression in the name of our founding fathers aka "freedom givers". Throughout this whole process rape was a critical weapon for the control of people. From this process comes the privilege I experience today. I reject this country and the system of oppression it sets up. Easier said than done right? I have to speak out because I am a boy. I have to constantly be looking at my motivation, review my actions with the utmost criticism and not fall into that self-hating poor me guilt shit that is a poor excuse to not do anything.

The next reason is that I am a survivor. Sexual violence is not talked about in our society nearly enough. When sexual violence is talked about in our society it is gendered to the beat. Sexual violence is not only something that happens to women joggers in central park at night by men they have never seen before. Sexual violence happens to people. Sexual violence happens to people of all ages races classes sexes genders religions political affiliations and regions of the world. I must speak out as a way of reaffirming, to my self, that I am a survivor and not a victim. I still blame and hate myself for the abuse that happened to me as a young person coming into the weird world of hormones called puberty. I have a tendency to separate myself out of the picture when I talk about sexual violence. I write it off as being not as bad as other people’s experiences. After all I’m still alive and experiencing privilege.

The next reason I think it is important to talk about sexual violence is that I end up around a lot of little kids. I look at these smart playful little boys and think 1 out of every 3 of you will rape someone. I see the media shoving it down our throats with all of the fucked up advertising and thinly veiled rape scenes, on TV and in the movies, which pass for sex scenes. The only chance that this world has is its youth and we bombard them with teachings about gender roles, fucked up relationships, unfulfilled sex, body image, domination, and violence and hatred. I could go on for hours about reasons that people should deal with sexual violence but that is not all I want to say. What I really want to talk about is how no matter how many patches or zines about smashing patriarchy a carhart sporting anarcho ken has, sexual violence happens in our activist communities. I am completely disgusted at how us boys in our communities deal with patriarchy and its horrific impacts. It is god dam pathetic. I constantly hear shit like “its so hard to talk to guys about this stuff” “but he does so much good work” “how come this meeting is only going to talk about how feels like she might have gotten raped” “she was all over him” “I’ve worked through all my shit” “we should just kick his ass”

Look boys there is a lot of work that needs to be done in this fucked up world but shit aint never going to change unless we take an extremely active role in dealing with sexual violence. It is one of the more horrific ways that people are taught their place in this social hierarchy. So I urge us all to fucking listen for a minute to people in our lives that are not boys. If they are saying something you don’t understand/ don’t think is important/ don’t agree with, do not dismiss it. Think about why you don’t get it. Take up responsibility for dealing with the fucked up aspects of us. Identify our privilege and where it comes from and be accountable to other people. Support each other in dealing with this instead of going to the women in our lives to hold our hands through another “tough time”. Know who you are, where you come from and own it.
On Losing Friends

I have known Rich for two and a half years now. During that time we have been very close friends. We met through a common activist group, continued to be involved in similar activism, and over the past two years have had a friendship rooted in much more than mere political beliefs. Rich's friendship has played a significant part in my life and my "growing up" (as I met him when I was sixteen and in high school). Rich and I attended protests and conferences together, and I attended my first street medic training with him, from which I've gone on to be involved in action-medical. When I moved into the city last year, I was a matter of blocks from Rich, and we would hang out daily. Many nights were spent staying up and talking until the sun rose. I shouldn't have to validate anything by proving that I know Rich, but recent mudslinging has put me in a very defensive position. My point is, Rich was not a random person. He was someone close to me. I valued his friendship, but I am no longer willing to put up with his mistreatment. So now I am losing a friend. And that sucks.

Three years of friendship, possibilities for love, support, and fun are a pretty substantial reason for denial. Beyond that, they're certainly incentive to keep quiet. For over a year I was aware of Rich's patterns and problematic behavior towards me and other women, but I thought that if I just ignored and did my best to avoid certain behaviors of Rich I could still benefit from the good aspects of his personality. I'm currently seeing a lot of similar reactions and attitudes coming from friends and acquaintances of his. But sexual assault is not an incident to be isolated or swept under the carpet. It is a pattern, a trait, and stems from who he is. It is not a part that can be separated from the whole.

The idea that Rich is not his actions is a dangerous one. For his treatment of women to be separated from his personality, his sense of humor, or his activist work is an invitation for those actions to be discredited or ignored. I cannot ask that Rich's friends abandon their relationships with him as I have had to, nor would I wish that--the process that I wish to see him go through is one of reconstruction, and one that he cannot go through alone. However, I do ask that my, and many other women's experiences, be present in the mind of his friends and acquaintances when interacting with him. I would not come out publicly with my experiences if it were not for the hope that it will have beneficial results, and prevention of further harm to other women.

Laura
Curled in the fetal position on the orange line heading home, October 8\textsuperscript{th} 2003, I had some big thoughts. The first thought was Hey, I'm not shaking anymore! The second thought was Oh Shit! It happened again. Again. And the third big thought, actually the biggest of them all: This time is different from all the other times, this time it's going to matter, this time something is going to happen, this time I'm going to do something, this time it's all going to change. And I promptly decided to forget it happened and to not tell anyone about the whole fiasco.

October 8, 2003 11:57 p.m.

Hey,

except for the obvious, it was really nice talking to you, and nice to be in an interview situation that wasn't getting my ass kissed about being a funny zine guy.

I'm sorry it turned out weird. Cuddling was nice. Since you were quiet, I am unsure how big a deal this all is on the grand scheme of things. I hope all is ok. I will talk to you soon and see you around thanksgiving.

Rich

Lucky for me, and I'd like to think it lucky for other womyn out there, I'm not so good at keeping quiet. Within a few days my silence lifted. It was stunningly difficult to talk about. After I admitted that it happened, it took me about a week to actually be able to describe the whole event. I would think the words out in my head, and then he said "Trust me" and kissed my mouth even though I had specifically asked him not to, and that's where they'd stay. I'd roll them around in my head and imagine saying it and think about him doing it and then I'd get stuck and the minutes would go by and then the hours would go by and I'm still on that one sentence. Detail by detail. Day by day. Recovering from sexual assault is like recovering from any other major injury or illness-it takes a fucking long time and it leaves me with scars.
and weak spots. But they are just that, a spot, isolated. Overall, I have become a stronger person. Maybe if I did not have this armor and this determination built up from past assaults, I would not be able to take this on.

Twice a Victim, Fault the Victim

I get nervous when I let on that I have been assaulted before; it has an insidious stigma. There is this very self-serving, patriarchal idea that someone who has been the victim of multiple assaults must be putting themselves at risk and therefore they are responsible for the misfortune that keeps befalling them. This is how the blame gets shifted. Unfortunately for me, having a vagina, and being 5’ 1” and 106 lbs on good days, is putting myself at risk and I have made a conscious decision that this is a risk I am going to take. I am also going to go outside alone. I am going to have male friends. I am going to be in cities. And I am going to have sex.

This myth of “twice a victim: fault the victim” is especially powerful because most womyn will not be assaulted once. That is, they will not be assaulted just once. Therefore, if we follow the logic of this myth, none of us are actually being assaulted, ever; we’re all just putting ourselves in bad situations! The sheer prevalence of sexual assault is actually creating an environment where sexual assault is acceptable and at the same time never happens. As John Stoltenberg put it, “Right to rape, wrong to be raped.”

I knew I was going to need to do something about Rich. I knew there had been complaints about him before. Unfortunately, I was not able to act quick enough. I have a chronic illness, was in court every couple weeks, and was trying desperately to make it through another semester. Sexual assault does not come with a pause button. It happens, the world spins around a couple times, and then I get up and start running to catch up with my life and hope that those episodes of grief and paralysis will be few and far between. I was terribly busy and every time I sat down to draft my anger to Rich I would be overwhelmed and consumed by the enormity of what it would mean to adequately confront his behavior. Weeks stretched on and I did nothing. I hardly told anyone about it. I was scared of the brushfire of gossip. If I did talk about it, I never said his name. I got progressively sicker. I took a plea deal in court, instead of pressing on for trial as I had planned. And I dropped out of school.

AND THEN HE ASSAULTED MY FRIEND
When Laura told me what happened, I was overcome with anger and grief and guilt. If I had acted sooner, than maybe he would not have been able to hurt her. It was obvious to Laura and I that something needed to happen. Not stopping Rich would mean that more womyn would be assaulted. We will do everything in our power to stop Rich, we are not willing to let him continue with his destructive behaviors.

Hypocrisy

I was not at Rich’s house that evening just to hang out. I had been studying men, masculinity and patriarchy and a professor that I was working with assigned a project that included interviewing an adult male about their feelings surrounding gender and other related issues. I decided to interview Rich. I have to admit that I wasn’t choosing Rich because I thought he would be a bastion of feminism and gender equality. I thought that Rich had some pretty fucked up ideas about womyn and about sex and I thought it would be interesting to see how that related to (or clashed with) his activism.

We did the interview and the results were mostly unsurprising. I think it is notable that in this interview Rich identified himself as a feminist. Also, I was particularly concerned when Rich denounced an idea that he attributed to bell hooks. The idea was that it is not the responsibility of the oppressed to educate their oppressors about the nature of their misconduct. Rich disagreed, if the oppressed don’t do it, who will? How will the oppressors learn?

This sentiment can be easily connected to the way Rich has, so far, handled being called on his assaultive behavior. While Rich has apologized to me, begged for forgiveness, and promised change, he has done a piss poor job of taking ownership for his behavior. Rich must understand that he is responsible for his actions; he must own them. Apologizing is never enough, and will never be enough. Taking ownership is not enough either but it is an essential first step. Every person who Rich has assaulted should not need to submit a deposition to warrant an apology from Rich. If Rich was truly committed to change within himself and to enacting change in the communities of which he is a member, he would take ownership for his actions without being prompted to do so. While Rich has apologized to me, he has not taken ownership for any of his violence towards me or towards anyone else.

Rich poses as an activist, as a radical, as a feminist, and as an ally. As a womyn, as a radical, as a feminist, and as a survivor, I am not going to be the one to leave. I have spent the last six months avoiding Rich. I skip shows that I know he is going to be at. If there is a party that he might attend, I call ahead to find out whether he is expected to be there. If people are not sure whether he is going to show up or not, I don’t go. The one time that I accidentally ended up in the same room as him it was unbearably uncomfortable and I spent the evening feeling incredibly self conscious because I was worried that he might be looking at me. This has to stop.

RichMackin (11:45:22 PM): My problem is not that I am doing sexual things decidedly that I shouldn't RichMackin (11:45:44 PM): but that I am doing things without entirely realizing that I am.
TaliPocket (11:45:54 PM): that's really fucking scary rich
RichMackin (11:46:02 PM): yes
TaliPocket (11:46:37 PM): that's also very convenient for you RichMackin (11:47:14 PM): well, it was convenient for me to avoid dealing with this TaliPocket (11:47:27 PM): oh yeah?
TaliPocket (11:47:56 PM): and you have decided to deal with it because it has become inconvenient to not deal with it.
RichMackin (11:49:01 PM): Well, I would like to think that part of me does care about being a good person and not harming people.
RichMackin (11:49:02 PM): BUT RichMackin (11:49:15 PM): yes, I really have nothing to say in my defense.
TaliPocket (11:50:01 PM): well rich. it's always inconvenient for me. every time i get assaulted it's wicked inconvenient
TaliPocket (11:50:11 PM): so inconvenient that i don't usually do anything about the fuckers RichMackin (11:50:30 PM): thank you for talking to me about this at all TaliPocket (11:51:13 PM): but lucky for you, the hypocrisy of your situation was just so infuriating that i decided to inconvenience myself even more and try to deal with you TaliPocket (11:52:50 PM): and it's losing situation for me. the whole way through.
TaliPocket (11:53:23 PM): and the best thing that can happen for you is that you'll become a better person TaliPocket (11:53:39 PM): i on the other hand don't stand to gain much at all.
RichMackin (11:53:58 PM): but if I stop being someone who hurts people, you are helping to stop people from being hurt
Response

Amidst some of the thoroughly disgusting, disappointing and hurtful discussions that have already begun to take place, I have seen a great deal of confusion over what exactly these "accusations" are and who the "accusers" are. Before having any information, people have asked why the Lucy Parsons Center would cancel an event just because Rich "made girls uncomfortable" (do I even need to comment here?!). This is not surprising considering the huge discrepancies between what Rich has privately admitted and what he publicly concedes. Here is an example of a statement he has made in public "As for my actions towards women, I have done a number of things that individually might seem no big deal- giving a backrub without asking if I could, being overly touchy, in one serious case using completely inappropriate language with a female friend who I should have more sensitive to. On a case by case basis, most of this can be dismissed or forgiven, but as I look at the patterns..." Alright, just to make things abundantly clear, this zine is not just about a non-consensual backrub, being overly touchy (whatever the fuck that means) or when Rich announced to me that he was "going to be a little aggressive" (and was), it is about the fact that a man who associates with a community of activists and refers to himself as a feminist, has a pattern of assaulting, and if I must pull out the big guns, raping womyn within that community. And for the record, I am accusing Rich of sexually assaulting me on multiple occasions.

Another misconception that is sprouting up all over the place is that the LPC statement is the first time Rich has been confronted about problematic statements and actions. This is simply not true. I am concerned that this assumption is rooted with Rich, and I’m quite positive that he is aware of having been previously confronted on several occasions. If there is anyone who should not have been surprised by the LPC statement it is Rich Mackin himself.

Since the public confrontation has begun, Rich has devised a defense wherein he defers responsibility away from himself and onto a problem of sexual addiction. The timing of Rich’s realization that he is suffering from this addiction is highly suspect, and leads me to question the validity of these assertions. However, whether or not Rich has a legitimate addiction to sex, this does not excuse him of any responsibility for his actions. As he has already begun to do in private, Rich needs to say publicly that he has assaulted and raped womyn, not announce that he is a sex addict. Rich has gone so far as to try to suggest that this disorder is a bigger problem than the fact that he assaults womyn. This is an audacious statement. In my opinion the only problem that is bigger than assaulting womyn, is assaulting AND murdering them, and while I think Rich has skeletons in his closet, I would hope that we’re still talking in metaphor.

Moment By Moment

Already people are demanding for "the accusers" to give details, to give proof. I’m really sorry that I didn’t video tape all those times Rich assaulted myself and other womyn, so what do you want us to do, reenact it? I do not feel that it is necessary for me to give a moment by moment account of what went on in Rich Mackin’s apartment all those times. First of all, this form of verification, this way of legitimizing a complaint is not only ineffective as a consequence for the perpetrator, but more importantly, it is painful and damaging for the survivor. I have been stripped and violated enough. If I believed that by detailing every moment of those assaults, Rich would stop raping people and I would stop hurting, then I would brace myself and write down my naked story for all to scrutinize.

Aside from it being completely unnecessary, I fear that the pain it will cause me to write publicly in detail about such personal and wounding events, will be intense and long lasting, partially because there is always pain in recalling trauma, but also because I am terrified of my experience being invalidated. I have no doubt that the people who read this and support me would be further horrified, angered, and saddened to read a detailed account, but I don’t believe that their support is contingent on receiving such a statement. As to the people who do not support me and to those who would defend Rich, I believe that not only will your opinion not be swayed by a detailed account, but that it will be used against me as yet another form of patriarchal violence.

What Now?!

Rich is an admitted sexual assaulter. He has proven that he is a danger to womyn and as of now Rich has said that he cannot control himself. While I do not believe that it is beyond Rich’s ability to treat womyn respectfully, any assertion about being incapable of not assaulting womyn should be taken very seriously. Until Rich is able to show the community that he can control his assaultive behaviors, he should certainly not be in radical space, and hopefully other spaces that respect the rights of womyn to be safe would set similar standards.
This sort of action serves three distinct purposes. It keeps space safe for womyn. It sends a message to Rich, that his behavior is unacceptable, and supports him by keeping him away from womyn. And it sends a message to everyone that survivors will be supported, and that assailters will be challenged.

I know that the LPC has received an incredible amount of flak and threats for their brave statement. As a survivor of Rich Mackin’s assault, I am incredibly grateful that a collective would have the strength to take a stand on such a sadly divisive issue. It excites me that another local collective, the Boston Area Liberation Medic Squad (BALM) would follow suit and reaffirm their policy towards sexual violence. Rich has caused an incredible amount of harm to this community. However, through the work of survivors like Laura and myself and through the courage of collectives like BALM and LPC, perhaps we can jump start this conversation. I’m sick of hearing manarchist boys plan the revolution for 9 am tomorrow. However if radical communities can succeed in dealing with sexual assault, I might be a little less skeptical.
System, Sex, and Patriarchy
Charlie Clements

“We are all given the choice whether to use law or to use our bare hands, but if you know what needs to be torn down, tear it down.” – Andrea Dworkin

A note on terminology: Language is so fundamental an aspect of psychology that we rarely realize the extent to which we are sculpted by it. In our culture women are defined in relation to men as ‘that which lacks’. The relational binary definition of gender is reflected in our language: men, and wo-men. To define women thus is to further their subjection and hinder liberation. To this end it becomes important to analyze and, insofar as it is possible, re-sculpt language. Though some attempts have been made in the last century to un-gender language and remove the ‘-men’ from ‘women’ I find these attempts largely ineffective except to the extent that they call attention to the problem. As such I continue to use the insufficient sexist terminology: “men” and “women”.

Patriarchy, in a very general sense, is the systemized and legitimized rule of men over any and all other genders and sexes. It is, in fact, the denial of the very existence of more than two biological sexes and two directly correspondent genders: male to man, as female to woman. Were patriarchy limited, however, simply to enforced gender roles its deconstruction would be a simple matter. Patriarchy is, of course, far more complex than this. It encompasses and creates each thing in the world; it defines our politics, our law, our psychology, and our language. We are sculpted by our society, socialized by patriarchy, molded and pressed to fit the demands of male rule. It keeps guard while we are speaking, moving, dressing, voting, working, and having sex. Patriarchy is the omnipresent eye watching each action and each thought of every individual. It is the all-seeing, all-knowing ruler of all that is human. Patriarchy is the god of a male dominated world. Within patriarchy are created two distinct sexual classes: man, and non-man, casually labeled ‘woman’, although clearly this second class, the dominated class, includes those of all non-male genders. The sexual classes functions along similar basic lines as the economic class system: one class rules, and the other is ruled; one is served, the other serves; one is free, the other in chains; one subject, the other object. The all-pervasiveness of this system, the depths to which we all bypass our own subjectivity and individuality to become sexual drones, can be seen when we examine one of the primary mechanisms by which patriarchy is enforced.

Within any hierarchy difference must be made visible. Men must know who to order, humiliate, subject, and abuse. Slaves must be black; Jews must wear armbands; women must smile and be pretty. The main method of sexual classification is the mandatory gender marking found in western culture. The psychology of each individual evolves within the system of patriarchy and as such grows to represent it. Men become men, and women become women, any divergence is leveled out by surgery or social ostracism and mockery. Within patriarchal society women become so deeply socialized as to willingly mark themselves as targets. Women become caricatures of themselves, propped up on heels, scarred by surgery, and hidden by makeup. Were male rule, however, so simple a matter as dress, patriarchy would have ceased as a system of domination centuries ago. More fundamentally patriarchy allows women no positive options within the system. An essential attribute of any oppressive system is the limit forced upon those oppressed, subjection to whichever direction they turn. To “be a woman” is to be dominated, but to throw aside gender marking, to whatever extent possible, is to be alone. To dress, walk, speak, or think outside of one’s gender is to submit one’s self to rejection and social outcasting.

The extent to which patriarchy has overcome any potential gender-free society becomes evident once we consider the effects on the individual of the rejection of gender marking. Women and men move differently; men take up more space and are more free with their limbs, women’s bodies are restricted and they walk in the least aggressive or direct manner possible. In conversation men assert themselves while women wait until they are asked to speak, until they are doted upon, at which point, of course, they are patronized, mocked, and shut up. Even our language is gendered, our pronouns and names bring with them the sex of the individual. To refer to a person at all is to refer to their gender. One simply cannot speak in any language without referring to gender. When a child is born without obvious gender, with multiple genitals or without any, they are surgically and hormonally modified to fit the norm. There is simply no room left open outside of the dualistic sex system. To not belong to one of the two permitted genders is to be outside of society, to be abnormal. Lesbians are raped for a “cure”; gay men are beaten and murdered for looking in the wrong direction; trans, queer, gender fuck, and amorphous individuals are seen as freakish, as unnatural. There is, of course, no natural evidence of the gender binaries. The number of sexually changing species is enormous; sex and gender are largely fluid in the natural world. To the extent that it defines our society the very concept of sex is unnatural. Sex and gender are thus entirely human concepts which have been written onto the natural world though the abuses of science, and onto the minds and souls of humans through the abuses of psychology and medicine. Enforced gender is the base upon which patriarchy is set, it is that which alternately dominates or liberates.

Men and women are socialized differently in every respect, and out of these differences evolve two separate worlds. The male world is that of liberty, rule, independence, sexual access, and privileged. The woman’s world is one of servitude, toil, denial, violence, and rape. The public world, that of industry and government, is that of men. The private world, of the home and bedroom, is the world of woman. In this distinction is found the essence of patriarchy. The private world of women is the natural, the assumed and apolitical. Women exist in a world of permanence beyond critique. They are shut up. A woman questioning is immediately questioned back, is immediately taken less seriously. When a man rapes or beats a woman, when a woman’s sex is taken advantage of, this is assumed to be natural. The man is simply taken as a desiring and sexual monster-machine who will consume the sex of any girl who may happen to stumble upon his territory. To these ends the rape and battery of women across the globe is a private matter, it is a problem with the woman, with the victim. She has crossed the wrong path; she has made herself vulnerable; she has not taken the necessary precautions. It is her fault. Those poor men, they simply can’t control themselves.

When women cry that they are oppressed, when they tell the world that they are being beaten and raped and battered into fear every day of their lives, they are not believed. The subject becomes the matter for debate. The truth is, when any individual is harmed there can be no debate. We question the motives of the woman in pain, we push her aside because she was asking for it. Our entire culture acts against the woman in tears. Any critique of this situation is mocked and brushed aside, patronized with political correctness trainings and sexual harassment seminars. However necessary these correctives may be, the femicide at the heart of patriarchy is still taken as unquestionable; it is beyond critique. The culture of patriarchy is predicated upon the domination of women and other non-male genders; to question culture is to question what is taken to be natural, it is to work outside of logic. Women must not speak up, must not question, and must not say no. They are demanded as the private slaves and sexual tools of men. Disobedient woman are beaten and raped into submission, they lack the very body from which to raise a cry of alarm. Within patriarchy women are not given the option of no. They can, however, take it.
you. That is why I shook your hand at the show. Letting you touch me any more than that would feel to me like betraying women who don't feel as safe with you. I don't feel threatened by you due mostly to the fact that I would have no qualms about hitting you, and I'm quite sure that I am physically stronger than you. I think a good first step for you to take in acknowledging the threat you present to women would be to stop touching them in any way that could be interpreted as sexual. If you want to talk further about your issues I'd be ok with that. I hope I've presented myself that way throughout this situation.

You have. The problem is that I have been very caught up in defending specific actions—because many of the things I did, out of context, can be defended (arguably—I am not saying that they are justified by any means,) just that I kept seeing details that I could address as details, not seeing the avalanche that all the little snowflakes was making up.

> I am glad that you want to stop hurting people. I think that you should get in touch with one of the feminist psychotherapy collectives in the boston area, or in portland (but the sooner the better) and make an appointment. I know that the tapestry collective in cambridge definitely does work with men as clients.

Since I am leaving in a week, I really won't be able to do anything about this until I get to Portland. I am looking into my resources there, but since this really is about 20 hours since this really has HIT me, I haven't made much progress. Obviously, I have not only contacted you about this, but have informed heather of the entire situation (barring names of some of those involved), have solicited opinions from a close friend and lover who is in her 20's and not in the punk or activist scene (although she, as well as heather, brought up many of the same points as if there was a meeting about this before hand.)

> You have my support in your efforts to stop hurting women.<

Thank you. I think I will need it.

Rich

RichMackin (6:20:09 PM): Ok
RichMackin (6:20:24 PM): Ok, Ciara started telling people I was a rapist RichMackin (6:20:41 PM): later, I did something shitty to you, you called me on it, we talked about it.
RichMackin (6:20:50 PM): Then the weird Laura thing happened RichMackin (6:21:03 PM): which I tried to talk to her about, but she doesn't want to RichMackin (6:21:15 PM): understandable, not saying anything bad about her RichMackin (6:21:27 PM): This means that I do have some sort of pattern RichMackin (6:21:46 PM): which means I might have done other shittier things not realizing the impact I might have had Dear Mr. Mackin,

In this letter is a list of demands and expectations. We have compiled this list because you have asked us what you can do. We hope and expect that this guide and your response will provide other individuals and organizations with a frame of reference for continuing (or discontinuing) their relationships with you.

You have proven to be adept at manipulation. To support you, we have created these expectations so that there is no wiggle room; it will be insurmountably difficult to satisfy them without your utmost sincerity and devotion. They will be incredibly hard to fulfill, but this ensures that your completion of this rigorous process will be meaningful and successful.

This list is subject to revision as deemed necessary by the survivors. If there are changes you will be notified in writing.

1. You will voluntarily cancel your upcoming tour in order to devote your time and energy to reparations and education.

2. You will take ownership for your actions: You will submit statements to Tali, Laura, and any other womyn you have harassed, assaulted, or raped detailing specifics of the offending behavior or language, claiming full responsibility for them, detailing why the action or speech was harmful, and offering apology without justifications. Once these statements are completed to the satisfaction of the survivors of your assaults, you will compose a public statement taking full ownership for all assaults/harassment/rape, specifying your plan for a permanent end to this pattern of sexual misconduct. This statement must be approved by all involved survivors before it is publicly released.

3. You will fully disclose your history of sexual misconduct to: all sexual partners, past, present and future; anyone with whom you share a short or long term living space; all activist groups you have worked with/are working with/will work with; any space you perform in, and anyone who distributes your publications.

4. You will stop touching wymyn. Because you have proved yourself incapable of touching wymyn in non-sexual ways and have admitted your inability to distinguish between sexual and non-sexual touch, between consensual and non-consensual interactions, we believe that the safest course of action is for you to cease touching womyn, including current partners, particularly since at least one has told you she feels you have coerced her into sexual activities. You will not touch womyn until all aforementioned public and private apologies have been made, and not until those people supporting you in your quest for change (partners, therapists, and friends) are in absolute concurrence that you are ready to attempt to engage in appropriate, responsible, safe and consensual sexual activity.

5. You will seek explicitly feminist psychotherapy to learn to interact with womyn in appropriate, safe, and respectful ways, and to unlearn the inappropriate, dangerous, and disrespectful behaviors in which you engage.

6. You will participate in anti-oppression trainings addressing male privilege, white privilege, and heterosexual privilege.

7. When you are able to consistently behave in a respectful manner, you will involve yourself with groups educating and facilitating men in learning to treat all people with respect and hold men accountable for their words and actions. You will do this work in radical communities.

8. You will take creative and meaningful (as defined by the survivor) actions in order to compensate for all the resources and energy that you have stolen from Laura, Tali and any other womyn whom you have harmed. These reparations are for the survivors, not for you.

We expect nothing less.

Sincerely,

Laura, Martha, and Tali
"Drama"

The recent leak of information due to previously mentioned lack of solidarity and betrayal has led to a ridiculous extent of rumors, mudslinging, and debate that has been very hurtful and frustrating to me. I don’t want to have to address any of this. Reading forums such as livejournal.com and xadamx.com has just been distracting and counter-productive for me in trying to put together an effective zine. However, these forums have escalated to a point at which I feel it is important to clarify a few points:

- Many people are saying that the “situation” is being “poorly-handled.” Before the publication of this zine, Tali and I have made no public statements, and certainly were not the instigators of recent rumors. The fact that this was “poorly-handled” is due to people’s own scandal-hungry gossip, and has only been more hurtful to those of us actually involved in the situation.

- I have never met or even spoke to Ciara Xyerra. This zine is not affiliated with her, though it is certainly in solidarity with the women she has spoken out for. Rich’s hatred toward Ciara has diverted attention from the main issue – his patterns of sexual assault – and focused in on a personal grudge. Rich refers to Ciara as his “primary accuser,” and then denies the charges that she holds against him. Until the publication of this zine, Tali and I have not publicly accused Rich of anything, and thus the “primary accuser” is not to be confused with either Tali or I.

- Many individuals are demanding dates, times and details to “verify” claims against Rich. I don’t feel that I should have to disclose such personal and humiliating facts to complete strangers for them to create a courtroom out of my sex life. Just as I don’t wish to be further objectified by Rich, I also don’t wish to be objectified by having details of my personal life discussed and torn apart on internet message boards.

- I have, however, confronted Rich extensively about past situations, and he has not denied any of it. Nothing is being said or alluded to publicly that Rich has not already been made aware of. Dates and details have been clarified with him. I have used the words rape, sexual assault, nonconsent, lying, and danger talking to him about our history. His response described my account as “fair and warranted,” “valid and justified.”
- I was not involved in the Lucy Parsons Center’s statement against Rich and on providing safe spaces, and since I haven’t yet spoken out to them or publicly at all, their decision to do this was not based on my experiences with Rich. LPC’s radical and courageous approach to survivor support is not just based on past individual experiences but on prevention as well.

- Included in the Lucy Parsons statement were claims that Rich is racist and transphobic. I do not dispute these claims but they are not my focus in promoting awareness of Rich’s history and danger to women. Because of these claims, Rich has managed to manipulate the discussion into focusing on “false accusations” – diverting discussion away from his admitted history of sexual assault.

- The most recent focus of both Rich and his defenders is that Rich is a “sex addict” – I find this diagnosis to be both invalidating as a survivor of his assault, and disrespectful to the actual behavioral disorder. Sex addiction is a coping mechanism. It is not an excuse to rape people. Rich’s problems certainly run deeper than isolated incidents of assault, but those certainly should not be overshadowed by what he perceives as a bigger problem.

—Laura
Definitions

Sexual Assault: A non-consensual sexual act. This includes any sexual touching, where sexual is defined by the survivor. It also includes, but is not limited to vaginal penetration, anal penetration and oral sex. Penetration, however slight, is the insertion of any object or body part into any orifice.

Sexual Imposition: Non-consensual sexual touching.

Sexual Harassment: Any unwanted sexual attention including but not limited to sexually threatening or offensive behavior.

Rape: A form of sexual assault. Non-consensual sex, where sex is defined by the survivor.

Ownership: Taking full responsibility for one’s actions verbally, detailing the action and its effects it had without providing justification.

Justification: A reason or excuse for committing an action.

Definitions from “System, Sex, and Patriarchy”

Binary: An opposing set of two. In this case, the gender binary: male opposed to female.

Femicide: The systematized murder of women as a group and not because of reasons unique to the individual. As genocide to a culture, femicide to women.

Gender Marking: The mandatory conformity to certain culturally defined standards of dress, speech, movement, opinion, language, etc. which come to demark and define the binary sexes.

Praxis: Using theory as a basis for action and action as a basis for theory

Definitions on Racism

Because of recent further allegations of Rich Mackin’s misconduct and subsequent discussion of racism, I felt it appropriate to include these:

Prejudice: Socialization towards pre-judging
-Race Prejudice: prejudice focused on race

Institution: an organization of human activity that gives a context of legitimacy vs. illegitimacy for what people do

Power: means of achieving or maintaining something
  - Power as institutional: use of socially (i.e. conventionally) legitimate institutions to gain or maintain something

Racism = Race Prejudice + Institutional Power: the (conscious or unconscious) use of institutional power to maintain unequal status and superiority over others on the basis of the race construct Racist: one whose actions flow from and whose status and privilege is bolstered by racially supremacist attitudes or principles, whether or not the person acts this way intentionally.

The Lucy Parsons Center has formally decided not to permit Rich Mackin to use our space for readings, speeches, or workshops.

The LPC is committed to radical struggles of liberation. We know that these struggles mean nothing if we do not live in revolutionary, anti-oppressive ways. As a result, we refuse to open our space to someone who has previously been accused of sexual assault and has responded by attempting to silence and invalidate his accusers. Further, Rich Mackin has publicly made racist and transphobic comments, both in his writings and at conferences (including previous Beantown Zinetowns). Finally, he has been sexually harassing towards girls and women to such a degree that many feel uncomfortable being around him—even going so far as to organize an alternate zine conference.

We apologize for the lateness of this statement. The events scheduled for the bookstore were never formally approved, though miscommunication caused them to be publicized as such. Regardless, our belief in liberation means that we will not allow our space to be a forum for Rich Mackin. The LPC is committed to girls, to women, to survivors, to people of color, to trans people—not to those who oppress and violate them.

Beantown Zinetown is welcome to use the bookstore on Sunday as expected, provided that Rich Mackin is not in attendance. We believe Beantown Zinetown is associated so strongly with him that the only way to maintain a survivor positive space is to create one in his absence. The scheduled Saturday night event with Rich Mackin will not occur at the bookstore. In its place, there will be a discussion at the LPC at 7:30 pm about sexual assault in activist communities and how survivors and allies can support each other in confronting and eliminating this problem.

In solidarity and struggle,

The Lucy Parsons Center Collective I'M GOING TO BE A LITTLE AGGRESSIVE
by Tali

I will never forget the way he protected me.
"I live in a dangerous neighborhood," he said, "I'll walk you to the T."

And he did. Rich put on his hoodie and walked me past the other rapists. You know, the bigger, meaner, brutal, blacker rapists. The ones you see on the television. The men whose faces are drawn in pencil and pushed up against the camera, their faces all shaded in trying to keep the bleached paper outside of the lines.

"I feel like I'm going to vomit." I said, out loud, to him. He drew me close and kissed me and then let me through the turnstile, away from him.

I was completely numb. Completely exhausted and worn down. I didn't really care anymore. It is commonly and conveniently forgotten that maintaining and defending boundaries is exhausting and terrifying. It is far easier to give in, to surrender and think about something else. I can pretend that it's not my body, I can think that it is just my body, it is only my body; it is my only body. I can close my eyes. I can go somewhere else. I can pretend it is someone else. I can pretend I like it. Someday maybe I'll grow so hopeless and fearless that I will fight back. Someday maybe I'll grow another six inches and put on forty pounds of muscle and bone and callus and then I'll fight back...

But for now I am a tiny little girl laid out like a delicacy on this man's bed. Your stomach is so tan! How did I get here? Even with all my disclaimers. All my rules. Two years of precedent. We can cuddle a little, but nothing else. Two years of just friends. And please, please don't kiss me. No kissing. Not right now. It makes me sad. It reminds me of something terrible. I'm getting really turned on. Then maybe we shouldn't be like this. I need to leave. I need to leave. Are breasts off limits? Yes. How am I going to get away from here? I was here two years ago with you, I thought we were past this? I've been trying to forget about that time...and all those other times. Wait, didn't I say no already? I've been saying no for two years. I'm going to be a little aggressive. I've been saying no since I met you.
RichMackin (1:37:09 PM): Hey, once again I am online for a bit...IF you want to talk. This will be my last IM unless you do want to talk. I hope all works out eventually..

I understand that when you put a nail in the wall, you can take the nail out, but the hole is still there.

I saw Michael Gregor today and his hair and beard were both trimmed neatly, it was weird.
